Cardiff v. Barbarians

Once more Easter is here, and we are giving a big welcome to the Barbarian Touring Team. This is the game of the year as far as players and spectators are concerned and everyone looks forward to seeing it. The Barbarians can always be relied upon to produce a side packed with the “glamour” names of international rugby, and if these boys settle into something like a team then some first class rugby is seen.

Their team for today is not known, but I think we can rest assured that it will be the strongest that they can put out, because although they beat us under floodlights earlier on in the season, they still have the memory of the beating we gave them last Easter to wipe out.

The party usually consist of recognised internationals and a few players who have done particularly well for their club.

This year is no exception, and of twenty-nine players on the tour, twenty are internationals and the remainder are club players.

One odd point is that there are no international players from Wales or Scotland in the party. Scotland of course, have a match against the touring Springboks. While the only Welshman in the side is John Lloyd, skipper of Cardiff Training College, and prop-forward for Bridgend.

The Cardiff side will of course, be all out to match the skill of their opponents, and skipper Meirion Roberts will be calling on the lads for maximum effort.

The pack have been doing really well this season, and if they can match their more illustrious opponents power, with skill and determination and can dominate them as I know they can, then I think we can bank on a fair share of the ball, and the rest will be up to the backs.

Both backs, and pack, can produce good rugby, but I feel there has been a tendency to kick too much, and rely on the bounce of the ball.

Let us see more handling, after all, if you kick the ball you are in effect giving the ball to your opponent, and unless there is a bad bounce, he accepts it very gratefully.

So go to it lads, let's see you handling and running with the ball. You have done it before—do it again!
